

PUNCH NEAPOLITAN PIZZA HIRING MANAGERS IN TRAINING

Punch Neapolitan Pizza is the top rated pizza restaurant in the Twin Cities and we are recruiting people who want to become managers at our high quality, entrepreneurial company.

Our pizza is special because we make it exactly how it's made in Naples, Italy. We use 900-degree wood burning ovens and our pizzas take skill to cook properly. We currently have seven locations in the Twin Cities. Punch is a locally owned company with its two owners John Soranno (founder) and John Puckett (founder of Caribou Coffee) actively involved in the business and the training of managers.

We are looking for potential managers that are enthusiastic, high energy, coachable, and passionate about quality. At Punch, our managers lead by example. They are intimately involved in the cooking process and in all aspects of daily restaurant operations. We prefer candidates who have significant work experience in restaurants. While some management experience is helpful, it is not necessary if you have the right attitude and credentials.

Compensation for a Manager in Training is $32,500 to $37,000 per year including bonus (depending on experience).

We expect a successful manager in training should become a manager with a year of training. Managers at Punch earn cash compensation from $52,000 for new, inexperienced managers to $85,000 per year for experienced managers.

If you are looking to join a large corporate training program, wear a suit to work, or think full dental benefits are more important than higher cash income; Punch is probably not a good fit for you.

If you want to get in at the early stage of an entrepreneurial company that is nationally recognized for its product quality, learn directly from the business owners on how to succeed, and be a hands on manager; Punch may be a good place for you.
